THE ANGLIO-AMERICAN BOAT-RACE. (Full Mail Gazette, June 30.)

On July 10 the Harvard Crew will leave for England. About the date eight of Oxoniens will assemble in London under care of a well-known "city coach," and from these few days' acquaintance will be selected the few who will represent the university in the forthcoming match, Cambridge, after reflection, having declared the responsibility of joining issue with the Americans.

Of the chances of either crew it would be premature to speak very definitely so in advance. However, the Americans should not be judged by the non-sensical paragraphs and criticisms from "economical New York journals," which have been so gravely quoted. They may be "hell-grit," as American journals have derisively called them, but they are not the trumpeting that heralded Harvard's arrival three years ago, and his first match with Kelleter, we might expect some nothing better than the form "torpid" or "junior" crew. The system of practice at Harvard College seems to row daily about five miles out on an "easy," then to turn and row home similar style. This is similar to the barbarous but long-exploited system of amateur training in the dark ages. When engaged in a formal trial, however, the crew of five miles, to enable men to keep fresh and correct faults, cannot be done when in distress. That row these long distances against the canals cannot row their best and hardest the way, and so they get into bad rowing shod and in bad form, are very disadvantageous when length of strength are at last really wanted in a race. If this description of the American method of training be correct, we they will be cautioned in time. The crew, however, is vigorous, and extremely expert in their own style rowing, all accounts agree.

It was the victory of the Canadian swains four at Paris in 1867 that prompted this challenge; but too stress should not be laid on that race. The Americans carried no dead weight in their boats, while the Canadians, who were the inside of ten boats, were in a hurricane, the British the whole very outside of the ten, while the whole river to cross before they would be able to effect the start. The British by no means anything, if slower, the by rights three or four minutes slower Putney to Mortlake than an eight, a fair weather takes less time than the in a gala. The London four, beaten year by the Etonians, before and when meeting on fair terms, finished day before them from a station more tired that the Canadians (though more exposed that of the Canadians), thus proving in no sense that the "running fairs."

In no parlance managed regatta are than four boats started abreast, for of equality of course; to set ten abreast an extreme absurdity. Lastly, the Canadians, if no one else, know their own race, when, though entered for a "give prize a day or two later in heats only" quailed, they declined to meet the "abashed Etonians" (who, moreover, they rowed previously had but just slept from a twelve-hour "journey") to the quality of the Oxford four, we are assured that it will, doubtless, be one of the best of the stoutest of the past. Truly, the two school editions of Oxford—Etonian and Radclian—who row Henley, not containing even together, when subdivided, the strength of Oxford University Boat Club, were up to win all the four-oar races, though were best in the "eights." At least recruits who did not row at Henley in the men's crew, and the house "won" the race against the school.

As to the course, it is expected, the enthusiastic Americans offered to meet Ox on their own terms (with coxswain), at their own water, from Putney to Mortlake. However, London and its suburbs: it means the most cheerful spots for vacation training, and the wash of steels and pleasure-boats would be more awkward for four than even eight's. Nothing is decided till the Americans arrive, but it is not unlikely that the Americans will be willing to race elsewhere, as the Americans will be willing to meet on meeting on water unknown to either. The Ban Brink Out at King's Lynn straight enough, but only for two. Wiltshire would do well enough elements were under command. Bala in Wales, where an experimental regatta be held in July, has been suggested as a venue. Time will show. It is five miles long, one in breadth, with rail and parallel for sightseers, and comparatively shallow. The tide, doubtless, will be shifted in the channel, so that the river will be at present, and to harvest will raise an outcry.

THE MARKET PRISON OF NATIONAL RATHY.—The London Mail still only insists that "British sympathy for the South" shall not be paid for in and, upon the whole, there is nothing natural in this protest. Certainly we no right to insist on a rule to govern to which we do not ourselves submit, or probably no American would like to tongue-tied, lest his "sympathy" for an unsuccessful struggle on the other side should be paid for in the same way, and taken out of the Treasury at Washington by the aggrieved party. It was a distinguished apostle of freedom of speech first discovered that when a whole indulges in that luxury it must also be paid for over the counter, worth while considering into what premises this doctrine may lead us; for the rule that "works both ways," and the time it works against us. We, certainly, have never scrupled to "encourage" sympathy, whichever of two contending parties is likely to win, and we have never thought of having our sympathy reckoned up against us at the market by the other party. In the case of England, especially, it is doubtful whether she has been engaged in any war for nearly a hundred years, in which we have not positively expressed our hopes that the world would soundly whipped. Our Fourth-of-July orators for years have talked this way many of our public men have done so. We have always given our own sympathy in much the same way as we think England did in our case to even a surrection—Canadian, Fenian, or Irish—against English control—and probably always shall.

GENERAL Grant is credited with the grammatical remark that office-seeking is fast becoming one of the industries of United States.
